

Efficient Transfer of Data Between a Database Server and a Database Client

Abstract

An end system representing a database server or a database client determines whether to send data in compressed format, and sends the data in a compressed format only if it is determined to send the data in compressed format. In an embodiment implemented using software instructions, a function (set of instructions) is implemented to return one logical value to send data in compressed format and other logical value otherwise.